WOULD END RAILWAY SELF-DEFENSE PLANS

Senator Gooding of Idaho has introduced in Congress a resolution calling upon Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate "railway propaganda." This undoubtedly refers primarily to the newspaper advertising done by the railroads to improve their relations with the public.

To disarm an opponent is one way to make certain the outcome of any combat. The fencer without a sword, the boxer with both arms tied behind him, the army without ammunition is bound to succumb. If the railroads are to be hampered in their efforts to place their side of railway problems before the public, with whom the power of railway regulation lies, then there will be no effective defense possible against those who are spending great sums of money and seeking in every way, directly and indirectly, to bring about the failure of private operation of the railroads. If the hands of the railroads are tied, if they are denied the right of giving the public the facts, then there can be no doubt that the opponents of the railroads will be victorious in their efforts to bring about government ownership.

Those who desire to deprive private ownership naturally regard it as outrageous that the railroads should seek to give the public the facts through advertising space purchased from the newspapers. Their idea of the combat is that the railroads should be bound and gagged while they themselves are left free to argue their case in every court of public opinion in the land.

When an attack is made upon an old, established institution like that of private property, to which the American people have been committed throughout their history, the burden of proof of righteousness should rest upon the attackers, not upon the defenders. The motives which should be questioned are those of the besiegers, not those of the besieged. Self-defense is no crime, but assault and battery is.—Illinois Central Magazine.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING OF DANISH BUTTER

Price of Product Is Kept Up Through A Careful Study of the Foreign Market Condition.

Why did Denmark ship four and one half million pounds of butter to Germany this March at less money than either her English or American markets? Since she exports over eighty per cent of her butter, why didn't she sell on the world market that paid the most?

The Danish farmers have learned to control their outlets through cooperation and government supervision, with almost necessary foresight. The Danes had more butter in January than their old standby, Great Britain, could absorb. They saved a depression in their English market by sending the United States 2,000,000 pounds in January. After paying the duty the butter laid down in New York brought more than the English market in February they shipped as 1,372,000 pounds. This, too, paid them more than the English market. But in March they shipped only 676,000 pounds. The market in the United States was then at its lowest.

Why didn't you sell shipping us so much in March when they had plenty to sell, but they sent us this year in the first three months equalled half of what we sent us all last year. It began to have the effect of lowering the United States market. They saw that our market was going down caused the English market to drop. So in March they took their surplus practically all away from both England and the United States and gave it to the Germans at a loss. The loss on six percent of their output that went to Germany, took this burden off the United States and maintained a higher level on their English market, which consumes seventy one percent of their output. Danish farmers handle their exportable products along sound, sane lines. American farmers are asking Congress for just such an opportunity through the McNary-Haugen Bill.

HON. FRANK K. DUNN

Republican Candidate for Justice Supreme Court
Election Monday,
June 2nd, 1924

Judged from all accepted standards of public service, and particularly of judicial service, Justice Dunn clearly deserves re-election. His ripe experience as a justice, due to seventeen years' service on the supreme bench, in addition to having served one term as judge on the circuit court of his home county, coupled with his high integrity and ability as a jurist, should insure his re-election. He comes from a judicial family, his father before him having served as a judge in Ohio. If the high standing of the Supreme Court of Illinois is to be maintained only jurists of recognized ability should be elected to this position. It is the duty of every patriotic citizen, both men and women, to vote at the judicial election to be held on Monday, June 2nd.
