Initiated Into Cross-Country Flying

EDITOR'S NOTE: Myrna Pickett, News reporter, flew to Georgia last week, accompanying her husband on a cross-country hop.

By Myrna Pickett

About 8 o'clock Sunday evening, April 18, it was all settled that I would accompany my husband to Augusta, Ga., in an open cockpit two passenger plane.

With this and that to get ready bedtime came rather late and 3:30 came around shortly, but being excited tends to make a person get wide awake as soon as the alarm starts ringing.

Our first stop was Evansville, Ind. We arrived there shortly before 8 o'clock. We refueled the planes and took off again.

We left Augusta close to 2 o'clock in the afternoon and started on our journey home. Our first stop Atlanta. Strange as it might seem I felt a faint urge to go to sleep and suddenly I found myself waking up, so I guess I must have dozed for a little while.

1:45 p. m., refueled and checked maps and took off for Atlanta, Ga. Now we were in mountainous country and I never saw anything look so pretty.

Soon we saw Atlanta in the distance, the tall buildings stood high in the air, but was hazy looking, and as we got closer Marshall pointed out the airport to me and we circled the field and they signalled us with a green light that it was all right to land.

We decided to get an early start the next morning for Augusta and we took off about 7:30 a. m. The country below was much like that of the western part of Georgia but seemed like I could never get through looking.

Before taking off for Evansville we stood and watched the large transport planes coming in from their flights. When I started to board our plane it looked a little small beside those Eastern Airlines planes, but I bet ours made just as much noise as theirs did.

We landed at Evansville around 1 p. m., ate a sandwich and prepared for the last lap of the trip. We were now ready to head for Sullivan. The country below was beginning to look vaguely familiar now, because of the square farm land.

for the last lap of the trip. We were now ready to head for Sullivan. The country below was beginning to look vaguely familiar now, because of the square farm land.

It seemed like just a short while when Marshall yelled at me and told me to look to my left and sure enough it was Windsor. Well, that's practically home. In just a few minutes I caught a glimpse of the Moultrie county courthouse dome.

TRIP THROUGH DIXIE LAND

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth of a series of articles written by J. E. Crowder about a trip through the Southern States. Another will appear in an early issue.

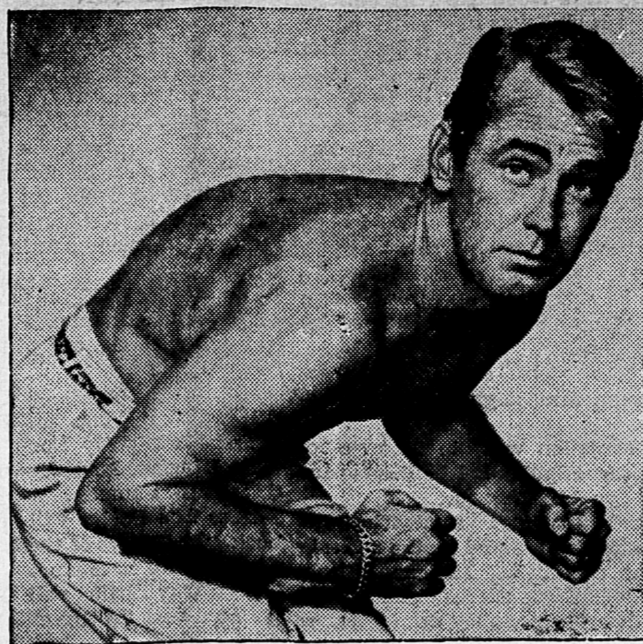

Florida is believed to have been a delta to a river one day some 15 to 20 million years before old Noah's flood (I gained this information from the state university at Gainesville and at different United States agriculture stations throughout the state.) It is believed that some day in the past, that a river emptied its soil and sands in the shallow sea water, underlaid with sandstone and limestone, with added coral rock. Some professors think that possibly the Tennessee river one day may have been that river, as this river runs southwest through Eastern Tennessee to a point at Chattanooga, just to the east side of Lookout mountain. As I know and saw the land was quite low at that point and could have been swayed either to the north (as the river is today) or to the south as it may have been one day. Since the water in the Tennessee river at Chattanooga is 2000 feet above the sea and Lake City, Fla., is around 100 feet above the sea, there is a fall of around 1900 feet. A part of this river may have flowed under the ground as all down below Chattanooga they have flowing wells, and on down into and as far south as the center of the state of Florida. Then, where do those mammoth springs come from that gush to the top of the ground in central Florida? Now it is believed that they are a part of that one day river that helped make that state a land above the sea.

When we come to places where they raise citrus fruit there are many hills. It leads one to thinking, how did these hills come here? No river could flow them here and they are too high for the sea to wash them there and they are not the shape as to be blown there by the wind. The sand I found is very sharp, so that denotes sand that was not washed by sea water (as sea sand is smooth, not sharp). We find that where these hills are there are always deep lakes in among the hills. So I was informed that this underground river boiled up the fresh cut sand and with it we find volcanic ash mixed with the sand. I brought home with me samples of this sediment of what I found in the lake bottom. It seals up the bottom of the lakes so the water can't leak out. Thus this crater was formed by the water boiling up and through the sand around it until it reached 100 or more feet. The pressure became so great that the water would break out at another place nearby and start another one, thus forming hills and lakes all over central Florida. However, outside of these hills and lake regions the state of Florida is quite level, flat and swampy. As we would drive along the roads (the roads were graded up in fine shape) there was quite an odor from the greenish, stagnate water that lay along the roadsides for miles and miles. But right in this water is where the finest cypress lumber in all the world grows. Lumber farming has been and is now a great enterprise in Florida. Some places we see them resetting trees in rows about 12 feet apart, many of them set in squares so that they can be cultivated each way. It will be around 50 years before they can get a sawlog out of them. Some are cutting them quite small for fence posts as they can get posts in about ten years.

Land values in this state is from nothing to $2000 and $3000 per acre. There is only seven percent of the land in Florida under cultivation and they have a hard time turning what they do produce. Fruit is very, very cheap in Florida. Millions of bushels drop on the ground and rot under the trees. Thousands of bushels are lost off the trucks over the roads. I suspect we ran over 1000 bushel of fruit scattered out over the roads. We could buy oranges at $1 per case and it costs $1.49 to ship to any point in Illinois. We could buy orange juice a case of 12 42 ounce cans for $1.80 and then pay $1.77 to get that case home, so the railroad is getting more out of it than the grower. Although the yield is about 30 to 1600 boxes per acre, the state average I was told is around 1000 boxes per acre. That is about 33 and 1-3 percent on $3000 value per acre for the orchard. These growers spend lots of money every year for fertilizer and they are obliged to do it or else, for we see orchards abandoned along the roads for lack of attention. That country sure was in hard shape when white man first came to Florida. It was just a wild jungle as we see most of it today, and it takes lots of hard work to clear the land, kill all that vegetation and then experiment with what kind of fruit would do well in that soil. Then possibly after ten years find they had planted the wrong kind of trees, or if the right kind, then who is going to consume this fruit? At first the market was Europe, then as the population grew in the states we consumed the larger part of the crop. Now Florida is producing 85 percent of all the citrus fruit consumed in the United States. I take this from government reports supplied me. Since there is only seven percent of the land under cultivation, just think of what Florida can or may do in the future.

It is very plain to me, that a young man could go down there with $25,000 or $30,000 and grow rich in about 25 to 30 years. But who is willing to wait that long? There is many a man starting in that land with $5,000 who will build a small house, clear some land every year and then in time set some fruit trees each year. By the time he is there 15 years he will have a 5 to 10 acre orchard where the oldest may be bearing yet. At the end of 20 years he would have a living but all this 20 years he must make his living outside, beside the labor and expense in caring for the orchard. There is plenty of chance to make a good stake if one has the money to start with and to carry him through until production comes on. Since our population of the United States is increasing by leaps and bounds I should think by the time one would get to production, the children would be grown and consume, that we could use all that is grown. One may live off the tourist until one gets the production going since in many places half the population is northern people who are there for the winter each year.
