I was spending some days, not ma ay years ago, in a very beautiful lite country village, and in a family that had more than common attrac tions to one who loves demestic life as well as myself. The little circle had in it more of real interest than athe seen developed in the same number of persons.

The father of the family-almost too young to feel yet that he was enwas a fine trank hearted young me-chanic, with a wide world of bounding life in his veins, an energy that when fully aroused, drove everything violently before him, and a warmth of disposition that won him more

They had two children the one a laughing browneyed and brown-haired little fairy of three years. Her name was Eveleen. The second was a crowing, laughing blue-eyed, plump little beauty of less than a year, promising to have all the charms of the older at her age.

I was sitting one afternoon in a quiet little room, with my feet upon book, in a state between asleep and wake-my nost away at his shop a hundred yards off, and my prets little hostess engaged in her house hold labors-when I was thown out of my indolence by a scream, that brought me to my feet like an elec-tric shock. After the first shrick of terror, the mother had quieted to a calm despair for the moment, and stood with the child in her arms, making no effort for its relief, and, indeed, it seemed helpless, for already the subtle poison seemed diffused throughout the frame; the brown eyes had lost their lustre, the face was blackened as if in after death, and the teeth were tight set in convulsive spasme that evidently would not pase awayse It examined the little lost darling for a moment, saw that it was hopeless, and then turned away, unable to bear the mother's agony. A Love Story .--- In Newark New Jersey, a wedding was to take place. All the parties were assembled excep the bride-groom, who tarried like the gallaut Lochanvar, and after waiting a long time the party broke up, lights were extinguished, and the unfortunate maid retired to weepe over her ill treatment. The next day she was unwell, and continued so for some time, and on the following Sunday a minister was sent for to visit and counsel her in her affliction. On his arrival at the house the reverend gentleman was much surprised to see the groom (that was to be) engaged in conversation with the lady; and before the minister left he asked him to performe the ceremony then stating that he did not come at the appointed time because it rained, and thought a short time would make no your present business difference. This did not suit the lady, and she refused to be married to him under any circumstancies, where upon he abruptly left, the lady recovered.

The listory of this enfous here's as follows-Burton, an officer of the East Indian Company having by a long residence in Upper India, ac-quired a perfect knowledg of the oriental language and customs, projected a visit under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, to the Holy City of Mecca, and the Tomb of the Prophet at Medina places rarely, if ever before visited by any Englishman. This he successfully accomplished in 1853-4, disguised as a fully accomplished in 1853-4, disguised as a Mohamedan Dervish. The history of the pil-grimage is not surpassed in interest and origin-ality by any book of travel. ever published-embracing his residence at Cario as a Mohammedan Student; the journey across the desert with the great annual caravan of pilgrims; the with the great annual caravan of pingrins; any visit to the tomb of Mohammed: the discovery that the sacred blackstone of Mecca is an arc-lite; the annul sermon preached at Mecca to an estimated audience of 150,000 pilgrims gatherman faith. To the religious, community this work fur-nishes information never before more public respecting the communication of a large pro-nort on of the Eastern World, while for general pterest, Burton's narrative will compare favorably with Eothan or Cresent and the Cross.
