My Log-book in Spots.

The nearest universal, and the most damnable of all the curses invented by men or devils, and inflicted with unwavering purpose on our race, is rum. Always, to men in health, it is an unmitigated curse.

It ruins the health, paralyzes the intellect, and debases the morals. It invades, with sacrilegious foot, the sacred circles of home, and drags thence the brightest and best, and damns them; and then shouting with fiendish glee, returns for more. Its insatiable appetite is never satisfied, but like the cruel grave, cries, give! give! It knows no mercy. The tears of woman, the suffering of childhood worse than orphaned, and the struggles of its entangled victim, are alike unheeded. On, on it rushes, plunging, surging, till, poised right over hell, it loosens its hold upon the swollen, quivering heart, and it falls into the heaving billows of fire beneath!

These remarks were prompted by looking into my Log-Book and reading the names of F. Robedeau, P. Mathews, J. Floyd. These men all sailed in one ship on the same voyage. Robedeau was a graduate of an eastern college; read law in Baltimore, where he was admitted to the bar, and rose to a respectable practice rapidly. Before him was a career of usefulness and honor. He had a clear ringing voice, a dark, piercing eye, an almost faultless form, and a command of language rarely surpassed. Addressing a jury, he must have been very powerful. His ambition was to be an eminent criminal lawyer, and he was fast attaining that position when he fell. He did not go down at once, but gradually. The usages of the society in which he moved were such that he must take wine; soon his appetite called for a stronger stimulant, and then his fall was rapid. In the fifth year of his practice he found himself without business, in debt, and harassed by creditors. In a fit of despondency he fled to New Bedford, and shipped in a whaler. During the days intervening between his shipping and the vessel's sailing, he was constantly drunk. He was drunk when he went on board, and had no knowledge of the sailing of the ship till twelve hours out from port. At the shores he managed to get some "gin drink," and of course was a gain drunk. At the Cape Verde he got more of the fiery liquid, and drank to such excess as to bring on this terrible disease, delirium tremens.

tered to his necessity as well as we could during the first night after we left the island, but in the morning when the sun was coming up, he broke from the men, rushed on deck, sprang upon the starboard cathead, screamed in a voice of unutterable agony, "Friends! Friends!" and springing high in the air, fell into the ocean; he rose again as the ship darted by him, and sent across the water the terrible scream of mortal agony, which was heard in every part of the ship, and went down again to rise no more till the sea gives up its dead.

Mathews was a native of Virginia. His parents were rich, and at twenty one years of age he was placed in possession of a fortune, and entered into business as a merchant in his native town. Three years and six months sufficed to work his ruin. He treated his customers and drank with them, and—but I need not trace his fall. He, too, left home to avoid his creditors, and went to sea, designing to pay them "under the fore-top-sail." He ran away from the ship in Simon's Bay. For two months he lived by the hardest kind of labor, and in the performance of the most menial offices for keepers of "groggeries," and was found, in the cell of the prison at Cape Town, where he had wandered, with his throat cut from ear to ear—done in a fit of delirium tremens.

Poor Floyd! He was a physician, a scholar, a gentleman. Like Mathews, he was the son of wealthy parents, and from his childhood had been used to luxury. He was brought on board the ship while she lay in the stream, and was then drunk. The next morning, supposing himself in the hotel, he called lustily for the waiter; his surprise on finding his true latitude was unbounded. But he made the best of his case, and often said that he was glad he had shipped, for now he was clear of his foe for a season at least.

Floyd is yet a seaman, indulging in the most beastly excesses when on shore, but spending as little time there as possible, and literally living on the ocean as a refuge from the dangers which beset him on land. O, that the seething waves of annihilation might roll over a traffic that does nothing else but kill and curse!

FRANK DIXON.

A Duel Settled by Cash.

A Frenchman was to fight a duel with an American; the conditions were that but one shot should be exchanged, and that the precedence should go by lot. The Frenchman got the first chance, but failed to hit his adversary. In the Yankee fired his weapon, the other called out: "Hold! I will buy your shot!"

"What will you give me?"

"Five hundred pounds."

"Nonsense!" cried the Yankee to him again. "I'm a good marksman; you ask too low a value on yourself."

"You estimate me at too high a price! but I will give you a thousand pounds."

"Agreed!" cried the Yankee, and the duel was ended on that point.

The same man in Ohio, said to be very large and price, are

THE WIFE.

Long years ago I met a child,

As through the world I passed,

She was the first star of my life.

The dearest and the best,

An angel child, by some strange fate,

To earth a dealer driven,

Who brought her virtues to my heart,

And left her wings to heaven.

I dream not that this child of love

Would mine forever be,

That she had come to tread this world

This weary world with me;

But as in kindness, side by side

We wandered day by day,

The more I loved her; and the more

She seemed inclined stay.

'Twas strange that from that very hour

I never knew a care,

But seemed, through some unearthly power,

A pleasant thing to bear.

And if perchance, her gentle eye

Ever marked a tear in mine,

'Twas turned to smile by her kind heart,

And treasured on its shrine.

Around my glowing destiny

Her hopes all centered were;

For much I tried to make this world

A pleasant home to her;

And still withal she seemed content

To bear its rougher parts.

Together with the joys she found

Whiled nestling at my heart;

And thus together, hand in hand,

We trod this vale of tears;

Our youth departing, but our love

Increasing with our years;

Forgetting all that outward world,

Made up of grief and sin,

But loving more the world above,

And a bright world within.

The cheeks that closely pressed mine

Is farrowed now by years;

For we have known the cares of life,

And we have wept its tears;

But God was ever kind to us,

Although the world was cold,

And we are growing happier

As we are growing old.

There is a brighter world in view,

A home from sorrow free,

A dwelling of eternal years

For my dear wife and me.

And O! the angel of my youth,

So good and jolly fair,

I know will take her wings again,

And be my angel there.

All About Marrying.

The world is just now in the midst

Of its wedding season and it is a Terrible time to whisper a word

In the ears of the flustering expectants.

It is really not so much an object for jesting, as for serious thought.

We look upon it in that light, and have saved some capital reflections from the Sandusky Register, and for which we give credit to the graceful and practical pen of Mrs. Victor.

It is a mournful fact that "this world is full of young men who want to marry and dare not. Deny this as some will, it is nevertheless true, as we can easily show.

In this town for instance, there are twenty or thirty young men well to do in the way of salaries and business, yet refuse to take the steps which they all want to take but do not and why?

Now the first question to be asked by any man is, can I properly support a wife? I take and affirm he counts the cost of living as the woman of his household and what support a modest, modern establishment; and, somewhat, adduced by the reflection, he plunges into, labor and costs business with an avidity that takes away his health eventually, in hopes of attaining, etc., income that shall enable him to marry, and have a home of his own. And this is the secret of all the hard, unendinging toil of the young men of to-day who are that approaching thirty years of age;—this is the reason of so many disappointed men and waiting women deny it as hide it as you may.

But says some good woman, you do us injustice, for any woman, who truly loves a man, will adapt herself to his circumstances with the greatest pleasure. But what man of any sensitiveness, or high sense of honor would take a woman from easy circumstances and a pleasant and well furnished home; to adorn his little four rooms and do his house work, as the first principle of economy would demand of him? Few will do it; for though the woman signifies her willingness to take up with circumstances that there would be complaining on her part, eventually, and sickness from over exertion, and unhappiness from many causes—all of which would render marriage anything but pleasant.

Now what is the remedy? Plainly that women must fit themselves to be such wives as the young men must have. Else the young men must fit themselves to be such husbands as the women want, and spend the very choicest years of their life in a dismal drudgery of ceaseless toil breaking down health, happiness, energy, only to give themselves up to sin and dissipation when best of manhood is gone. The woman must choose for herself which it shall be for the matter is solely in their hands.

Let mothers say to their daughters, put on that calico gown, go into the kitchen and prepare dinner, take charge of the household, and fit yourselves to become a wife and a mother. Let the young woman cheerfully consent to such service, and instead of lavishing all thought, and time and money upon the adornment of the body, seek to accustom the hands to proper industry, and school the mind to proper taste; then there will be no longer complaints that young men "cannot afford to marry and we shall have beautiful, modest houses all around us and women shall have loving husbands, and life shall once more have something of the truthfulness and virtue which it had in the days of our blessed fathers and mothers, when it was a woman's ambition to become the head of the house and the mother of noble children.

A wretched victim of misplaced confidence, named Wm. Huling, committed suicide in Iowa, last week under the following circumstances:

He had been paying serious attention to a young lady, and seeing her ride past with another gentleman, and knowing they would soon return he went and hung himself upon an apple tree, by the roadside, in full view of the lady and his rival, and soon expired.

A Case Yankee.

An excellent story is told concerning the manner in which a Yankee sold the landlady in a village in Ohio, through which the Great National Road passed. It was well known by the travelers on this road, that it was impossible to get a full meal at the hotel in question, because an understanding existed between the landlord and the driver, and almost as soon as the passengers were seated at the table, the stage was ready to start. On one occasion, lacking the passengers was a Yankee, who would be "gall'd" if he would not have the value of his money, any how.

His fellow passengers were anxious to know how to manage it, and after a while they learned how.

"Breakfast ready, gents," said the landlord, as the stage drove up to the door.

"Take a wash, gents. Here's water, basins, towels and soap."

After performing these ablutions, they all proceeded to the dining room and commenced an onslaught upon the edibles, though Hez took his time. Scarcely had they tasted their coffee, when they heard the unwelcome sound of the horn, and the driver exclaim, "stage ready!" Up rise eight grumbling passengers, pay their fifty cents, and take their seats.

"All aboard, gents!" inquired the landlord.

"One missing," said they.

Proceeding to the dining room, the host finds Hez very coolly helping himself to an immense piece of steak, the size of a horse's lip.

"You'll be left, sir. Stage is going to start!"

"Well, I haint got nothing to say gain't it," draws out Hez.

"Gent's wait air; better take your seat; we's about to start."

"Dew what?"

"Got in air."

"I'll be g-d darned if I dew, nuth-er, till I've got my breakfast. Pay paid for it, and am goin' to git the valle out, and ef yew callerate I aint, yew are mistaken."

So the stage did start, and left Hez, who continued his attack upon the edibles. Biscuits, coffee, &c., disappeared rapidly before the astonished landlady.

"Say, equine, them 'ere cakes is about out; fetch another grip on em.

Yon, (to the waiter,) nuther sup of that air coffee. Pass them eggs.

—What's the reason you're the wrong side of your stocking out? said Jim to Pat.
The reason—the reason is it said Pat, it's because there's a hole in the stocking.

Although we have a soil for fertility, unsurpassed, perhaps, by any under the broad canopy of heaven, we still will aim for increased produc-

The fertilizing power of mould, depends, partly on its peculiar mechanical and porous structure, and partly on its chemical structure.—All porous substances, like charcoal, platinum, sponge, and well pulverized clay or loam, have the property of condensing gases, and retaining odors. This is shown in the practice of burying the dead bodies of animals in mould, to prevent the escape of offensive and poisonous odors. This property in mould, is said to be purely mechanical; but is none the less useful in the economy of nature, on that account.—When intimately mingled with compact earth by the use of the plow the harrow and cultivator, mould increases its friability; and promotes the chemical action of atmospheric air, and the development of all the latent elements of fertility in soil. The absorption of solar heat is promoted very much by the dark color of our mould; thus the ground is warmed, while it is peculiarly calculated to imbibe dew, and a large quantity of rain water. That both heat and moisture are indispensable to the growth of vegetables, is known to every one; and to secure these mould plays a conspicuous part. Whatever constitutes the best food for any given kind of cultivated crop, is the kind the farmer should use. That the several atoms contained in one plant of corn or wheat, are well adapted to form another plant of the same kind, is a truth not to be questioned. A question. Why is it, that the remains of a turnip or a potato form mould or manure, adapted to the growth of all other crops? Answer. All crops, including, of course, turnips and potatoes, consist mainly of three elementary bodies, called carbon, oxygen and hydrogen. Thus if we burn carefully, with the air mostly excluded, wood, starch, sugar, oil, &c. or less than, coal may be produced. And the essential element of sulphur.

The following passage occurs in the report of Dr. Kirklin, of the Hospital of the Innocents, Pennsylvania:

"Five cases were clearly attributable to tobacco. . . . MECCA AND MOHAMED.
G. P. PUTNAM & CO., have published Burton's Pilgrimage to Mecca and the Tomb of the Prophet, with illustrations by Bayard Taylor. 1 vol. 12 mo., with illustrations $1.50.

The history of this curious boy is as follows:—Burton, an officer of the East Indian Company having by a long residence in Upper India, acquired a perfect knowledge of the oriental language and customs, projected a visit under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society to the Holy City of Mecca, and the Tomb of the Prophet at Medina, places rarely, if ever before visited by any Englishman. This he successfully accomplished in 1855, & disclosed a fully authenticated Mohammedan Derwish. The history of the pilgrimage is not surpassed in interest and originality by any book of travel ever published. Embracing his residence at Cairo as a Mohammedan student, the journey across the desert with the great caravan of pilgrims; the visit to the tomb of Mohammed; the discovery that the sacred blackstone of Mecca is an artificial stone; the sermon preached at Mecca to an estimated audience of 150,000 pilgrims gathered from all parts of the Moslem world; his escape from detection and the only accurate account of the ceremonies of the Moslem festival.

To the religious community this work furnishes information never before made public respecting the ceremonial laws of a large portion of the Eastern World; while for general readers Burton's narrative will compare favorably with Arabian Nights or the Arabian Nights.

For the Express.
27th Sept. 1857.
BY DR. J. R. B.
The heart is a strange thing, Lingers still on the string with a dulcet thrill'd the heart, When you murmured at parting a gentle farewell.
By memory's power, how often comes o'er me,
With a feeling that words, lady, never can tell.
Thoughts of that hour—when seemed before me,
And I hear again, lady, your gentle farewell.
How I remember—oh never will I forget—
The gloom it has left—the bitter regret—
I felt when you bid me that gentle farewell.
I think of thee yet, with a nameless thrill,
And though my soul seems And my heart beats wildly—it wildly stood still.
When almost a whisper, you said farewell.
Sublime.
'Twas a calm and beautiful night, and nature had put on the loveliness of Autumn. The pale moon and the host of brilliant stars, were shining forth in all their transcendent beauty, gladdening the hearts of their numerous beholders. Sweet perfumes of decaying flowers, seemed to float on the still night air. All nature was reposing, and nothing but the gentle breeze, as it came softly sighing through the tops of the almost leafless trees, disturbed the quiet thoughts that came in quick succession through the mind.
During this lovely, consecrated hour, might have been seen, emerging from the front entrance of a large and costly mansion, two beings, a lady and gentleman, apparently the happiest of mortals. They sallied forth to an immense shade tree, in front of the magnificent building, and stood confidently beneath its protecting boughs, their hearts filled with love and admiration of the ten thousand beauties that surrounded them. But, alas! how short of duration, are the most sublime and peaceful hours of human life: the next swift gale of misfortune, as it comes rushing by, may waft them away to another clime, and forever beyond our possession. And such was the final denouement in this memorable instance. This happy pair had not been long wrapt in this splendid cloud of nature's loveliness, when a lad, seemingly of about eleven summers, came forth and stood, for a moment, on the marble steps in front of the mansion: for a moment only, he seemed to hesitate, and then silently approaching the spot where his parents stood, his young mind filled with a strange presentiment, placed his delicate hand on his father's breast, and looking up with streaming eyes, softly said, in tender accents:
"Father, father!"
But the soft words fell unheeded on the passing breeze, and the father stood gazing upward, forgetful of everything mortal. Suddenly the eyes of the youth rested upon a splendid diamond pin which completed his father's toilet. He started back, surprised and bewildered, at the costly jewel worn by his father, and with all the united energies of his soul, exclaimed, "Thou art a beggar, what a beggar!" The father, in reply,
"True happiness is of a retired nature, and an enemy to noise and noise; it arises, in the first place, from the enjoyment of one's self, and in the next, from the friendship of a few select companions. False happiness is to be in a crowd, and to draw the eyes of the world upon her.
She does not receive any satisfaction from the applause which she gives herself, but from the admiration which she feels in others."
