A high tariff on farm products which kindly Congress tend to increase the size of the has been trying all summer to give the farmers will not do the latter one iota of good according to James E. Boyle of Cornell University.

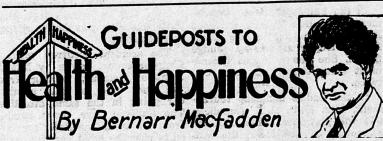

"Production rather than protection is the farmer's biggest problem," he says. "It is time now to go further than and bright colors are not so good broke about 25 of these bulbs. mere county or state or national programs. It is time to as dark neutral colors for the They were brought into the court make our programs fit into the international pattern of woman of large build. production. Ninety per cent of our agricultural products A thick steak after searing ing assessed only in one case. have their value directly affected by foreign competition or may be successfully finished in a industry those interests which have had protection the longest, namely, the two textiles, cottons and woolens, are now the worst off.

"The farmer ought to learn once for all that the proskillet, and the meat will cook other fruit juices, lemon, sugar, series of union church tective tariff is no foundation for him to build on. Even in evenly without being turned.

As an example of how the tariff works out, Mr. Boyle cites the case or oranges. Florida oranges, he says, are "di rectly influenced by the production programs of the South African Boers, and the Palestine Hebrews, for they all sell oranges in the same market, London. A few of the South African oranges now find their way into the Uited States at certain seasons of the year. If the tariff wall shuts this commodity out of our domestic market, then this commodity will compete with ours in the London market instead of the New York market. Once these surpluses are produced, there is no way to prevent their coming into international competition.

"As a matter of fact," concludes this writer, "free trade in food stuffs would affect very few farm commodi ties produced in the United States. The freight haul across the ocean is itself a natural protective tariff. To illustrate The Japanese coolies in the rice fields were being paid 50 cents a day a few years ago; at the same time white labor in the California rice fields were being paid $2.50 a day, or exactly five times as much. But the Japanese workers took 30 days of labor to grow an acre of rice. The California workers took two days. So the California labor produced 15 times as much per capita, and was paid only five times as much."

How the Useful Plants Came to Mankind By T. E. STEWARD WNU Service

Spinach IN CONTRAST with such vege tables of ancient use as the cabbage, turnip and bean, spinach was introduced into Europe as recently as the Sixteenth century, at which time there was controversy whether the name should be spanacha, a vegetable from Spain, or spinacio, a vegetable with prickly pods. Eventually it was shown that spin-ach was a Persian plant, almost certainly coming from the ancient empire of the Medes and Persians, whose hordes used continually to menace the Greek civilization from the East. The Persian name is ispay or ispanj, and the Hindu, isfany or pinnis. That it has no Cultivation of spinach probably originated about the time of the Greek and Roman civilization, when the Persian empire was also flourishing. Its spread was slow, both to the east and to the west. No mention of it in Chinese records is found until between 600 and 900 A. D. Ebn Baither, a resident of Malaga and a great traveler, reported evidence that it was raised extensively in ancient Nineveh and Babylon, which he obtained from Arabian writings.

Spinach has frequently been identified as wild, but the facts are not wholly beyond question. A variety, spinacia tetendrata, is found to the south of the Caucasus in Turkestan and in Persia, and the modern spinach may be a derivation through cultivation from this plant. Tetendrata has been brought under cultivation in India and some botanists, after a careful examination of the resulting plant, claim that it is identical with the garden spinach of the modern world.

In this respect it differs marked-lw from lettuce, which has been positively identified in the wild state in a great variety of places, ranging from the Canary islands and Algeria to temperate and south ern Europe, Persia, Abyssinia and China. It does especially well in Two thousand years ago botanists described three varieties, while latterly this number has grown to more than fifty, many of the kinds having been developed in the gardens of temperate Europe.

MARKING A NEW ERA IN SCREEN ENTERTAINMENT

Her Star Boarder Came Back

By FREDERICK HART

VHEN Margaret Anderson started the "Blue Rose" tea room she had no premonition of failure. The neighborhood where she had rented her two small rooms was quiet but populous; there seemed to her to be a good chance for a place that advertised home cooking and dainty surroundings. She had a little money-enough, she was sure, to keep going. Her cooking she was sure of; her home training had made her waffles famous. There would be no difficulty in training anyone she might obtain as assistant. When she had paid the first month's rent to the agent and taken possession of the little place with her shiny new key she experienced a thrill of pride. The expenses of the first installation were heavier than she, had imagined; her helper demanded payment in advance, and large payment at that; the furniture she bought at second-hand stores, her good taste standing her in good stead; silver, china, etc.; kitchen supplies—she had a very slender balance left in the bank when she had finished writing the checks. But for the first two weeks of her month people came in streams to the little tea room, as they always do to a new place, and Margaret's unvarying service and the fame of her waffles carried her through the breakers triumphantly. Among the customers whom she had begun to designate as "regulars" was a young man who appeared for two meals-breakfast and dinner-every day. He was punctual to the minute—eight o'clock sharp for breakfast; 7:15 in the evening for dinner. He was quiet and polite, and never joked with her or with Hilda, the maid, as some of the others did. He spent his breakfast time looking over the morning paper, and his evening seemed to be devoted as much to figuring as eating; he would draw diagrams on a slip of paper which he invariably carried in his pocket, eating mechanically the while. One morning, well on in the third month of Margaret's venture, he appeared as usual for breakfast; the day passed; seven o'clock arrived, and the tables began to fill; 7:15-and Margaret found herself looking at the door, expecting her "star boarder," as she called him in her mind. But he did not appang at her heart which surprised her and did not please her. And he was not there the next morning, nor all that day in fact, and when two days had passed without his reappearance Margaret gave him up for lost.

His departure seemed to have a bad effect on her fortune, however, for when she balanced her books at the end of the month she found herself facing a deficit. Her success during the earlier days of her venture had been in large degree the result of the curiosity which leads people to try new places; and even the excellence of her waffles had not been able to hold many of the palate-weary passers-by who had come as an experiment. A and flashier tea room had opened only a block away, and many of her customers had fled thither. As Margaret sat alone the night of the last of the month she reflected bitterly that when she had written the last check on the morrow, there would be nothing left with which to carry on the busi-

The lights in the "Blue Rose" were extinguished, all but one over her desk. Before her was the ledger, once the repository of her hopes, now the record of her failure. Outside the street was silent save for an occasional belated car chugging by. A knock on the door startled her. Hastily she sat up, dabbing her eyes with her handkerchief. Who could it be at this late hour? Courcould it be at this late hour? Courageously she went to the door and opened it. "We don't serve after eight—" She was beginning, when she stopped with a little gasp. "Oh—it's you!" she exclaimed.

Into the small circle of light cast by the dock lame stopped the

by the desk lamp stepped the young man—her erstwhile star boarder. "Yes," he replied ungrammatically, "it's me." Then he looked at her sharply, and then at the open ledger. "You've been crying!" he ac-

"I—I have not!" she exclaimed indignantly. Who was this youth to accuse her of shedding tears? But her voice trembled in spite of herself. For a moment she braved it out, and then overstrained nature gave way. Down went her head on the desk and her obs broke forth. "Oh, there isn't any use!" she exclaimed desperately. "Everything's zone wrong—the Blue Rose is a "Everything's failure, and so am I-nothing's een right since you left-" she stopped, horrified at what she had said. But the young man laughed out, and suddenly she found herself in his arms. "Dear," the young man was saying, "you remember those diagrams I worked on so much? Well, they were plans for a new invention of mine—and it's a big success! I came back to tell you about it— and to tell you that I've been in love with you for two months, but I was sure that my machine would go; and it has—and I've come

Two Dubs From the Apple Country

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1929

By IRENE DAVIDSON

TSCHAIKOWWWSKH!" - or however you spell a sneeze! Lynn dug her hot little face into the damp and doubtful relief of a perfumed pillow. It was apple leaves perfume; she had bought the bottle, "By Blasco, Perfumer," at the five-and-ten the day before. If one had to be miserable, one might as well do it to music-or perfume, as it was in this instance.

Besides-Lynn had just missed the apple blossoms when she left home where about eighteen million apple trees were scattered over the hills. At least it looked that way, in apple blossom time.

"Tschaikowwwskh! Tscha-ikowww-SKH!!"

If he sneezed one more time she'd throw shoes at the wall . she'd knock on it with that old and-This was the second day he'd been sneezing. Didn't he TAKE anything for his sneezes? How could she have the flu-or whatever this was-in peace, with that racking explosion in the next room every ten minutes? Tears of sheer nervousness got rubbed into the apple leaves pillow. A nice way to land in Washington, anyway! Homesick already, and physically sick, too, on top of that. Just how sick she was afraid to speculate. But it was funny daughter Ruth spent Sunday with feeling this way; so sort of jazzed up and unsteady.

Let's see—she was supposed to start work the 15th; this was the 9th. She had figures, back there at home, on giving herself a week to see Washington. She wanted to see' Blossom place-like the picfamily and Mr. and Mrs. Fred ture- Lynn perked herself up on Pierce spent Sunday with Mr. and the pillow. Her mind was certainly wandering if the Blossom place Marie Feller entertained her was the first thing that came into her mind in the matter of seeing Washington!

She pulled the light string determinedly, stepped down into the blue slippers and walked unsteadily to the rocking chair by the win-

Could it be possible she'd fought the flu all winter to fall a victim to it at this most inopportune moment? Surely, the gods who had sorted her own papers from among those certain thousands in the Department of the Interior and had directed the letter-of-adventure that notified Lynn Wheeling that a job waited her in the Capital city, weren't going to leave her flat, like this? What would they do (in that mysterious department) if she should fail to report for duty on the 15th?

"Tschaikowwwskh!" Mother of ! ! ! Serene little Lynn felt suddenly wild. Flu is Cerre Haute, Ind., and Mrs. Dale one thing-but sneezing! Any kind Patterson of Toledo, Ohio spent of pills will stop sneezing—for Saturday night the the home of a while, anyway. Her eyes fell on the white box on her table, and widened. She reached for it with one movement, and with a continuation of the same movement slipped to her door, then to the door next her own, then knocked.

It was a minute before the knock was answered, by a slightly di-sheveled figure in a brown dressing gown. Lynn held out the white

"It will stop the sneezing," she said simply. And then the world went gently dark. Ten minutes later when she opened her eyes they traveled up

"Im all right, now," she heard Mr. and Mrs. B. Tucker of herself saying. And then her voice Long Creek spent Sunday with kept right on; she couldn't seem to stop it. "I gave myself a week to see Washington, you see, and now I'm afraid I'm going to have Beals went to Ohio on business the flu. I wanted to see the Blos-Wednesday. tomac. We have apple blossoms at home, you know-

"I don't know what they'll do in the Department of the Interior if I don't show up the 15th . . . . I'm all right now, but I have a feeling I'm going to be-sick."

Another voice cut through, gentle, yet a commanding sort of voice. "In the name of the great god Pan -you must come from the apple country, too! Don't worry-I'll get a doctor-and get in touch with your department. Go to sleep, can't you—or something—while I get busy. You're a sick woman, child!"

Two weeks later John Winton maneuvered his car along a beautiful driveway so that the Blossom place fell like a drift of snow out of fairyland directly in front of

Then they looked in silence a minute. John laughed. "Two dubs from the apple country, kid!" "And maybe you think I didn't know how you felt that day . . .

Lord! It does seem like ages ago! But you weren't so bad as I was, Lynn! I was the greenest thing you ever saw. I'd never been out of the home town in my life; got all my training in correspondence schools. Gosh. but I was homesick for apple trees.
"Somehow—" the blue eyes looked straight into the hazel ones "Somehow I don't seem to figure on being homesick or lonesome again, Lynn . . . Do-
